

it would cover others than the railroad.

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: Right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And whereas the railroads are telling us how they test, they cannot assure us that other employers are doing the same thing...

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: Right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...in terms of expanding the class of people who are tested beyond what the federal government requires. So I think it needs to be clear.

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: Okay, under your amendment which you envision would be correct here, would be, let's say that the federal government does require a certain class of employee to be tested, and that class isn't every member of a company.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes.

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: For example, let's say the people that might be in the transportation end that would be safety sensitive areas of transportation, but that the bookkeepers, the people that do the income taxes, the people that type that aren't in those areas, they aren't required by federal law to be tested.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Those that hurt the public by stealing rather than those that hurt the public by running over them?

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: Yeah, that do it in a classy way.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay.

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: Those people under the amendment as Senator Wehrbein has it, if the company is required to test federally some of it, and the company chooses to put all their employees under that, there is no need to have them under state law, right, because everybody pretty much would be tested, and if they would test, they would follow the federal guidelines. Those aren't the things that are at issue.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And what you are posing with your question, so that I can state it and be sure we are saying the same thing,
